

Trudy Gregorie is a national consultant and senior director with Justice Solutions, a national non-profit organization in Washington, DC, that provides consulting, training, and technical assistance on justice and victim issues. Gregorie has 28 years of experience in criminal and juvenile justice, specializing in victim services. She was director of a prosecutor-based comprehensive victim services program in Charleston, SC; served on the initial task force that developed statewide victim services policies, procedures, and standards; and was a founding member and officer of the SC Victim Assistance Network. In 1992, she joined the SC Governor's Office and developed the State Crime Victim Ombudsman Program. From 1994-2001, Gregorie served at the National Center for Victims of Crime as Director of Victim Services and Training.

At the national level Gregorie has been involved in the development of numerous training programs, curricula, and resources on emerging issues for the crime victim services field and allied professions. She is a certified trainer for the National College of District Attorneys and National District Attorneys Association, the Federal Judicial Center, the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges, the National Institute of Corrections, the Center for Effective Public Policy/Center for Sex Offender Management, and the U.S. Department of Justice. She has provided training in more than 45 states and provided numerous national media interviews in the press and electronic media. In 1999, Gregorie was awarded the National Crime Victim Services Award by the U.S. Department of Justice. She was the first elected Crime Victim Representative on the Delegate Assembly of the American Correctional Association, and served three terms. She serves on the ACA's Victims and Restorative Justice Committee (which she has chaired) and is a member of the American Probation and Parole Association's Victim Issues Committee.
